

You can imagine how hard it is to be a 'new' injector, It's not always easy to find willing test subjects even if you're trained by Meesha Aesthetics. Injector's Dee, Desiree, Tessa and Sarah are working hard to pass their Meesha Exams in an effort to be accessible to the standard client base. For that to happen they begin injecting on their families and friends, and eventually on the Meesha Staff (and their families).

Enter Frankie - He's no stranger to Botox, he's been Chris' significant other for 8 years now, and has been getting botox for 6 of them! Typically Frankie's injector is his mother-in-law / our lead injector Michelle. For years now she's faithfully injected Frankie with 55 units of botox spread across his Frontalis and Glabeller. As An over expressive person his botox lasts about two and a half months instead of the standard 3-4.

When Chris First brought up the idea of being a 'model patient' for our injectors-in training, Frankie was of course hesitant. After all, this is his face we're talking about and what if he ended up with brow ptosis - aka Drop Brow!

Chris reminded him, that even if that occurred, we could remedy it, but also appeased his fears and let him know Michelle would be in the room to ensure proper botox placement!

Frankie agreed to the treatment and rode with Chris to the office when morning. Cranky due to the 530am alarm, Chris made sure to load Frankie up with Caffeine and donuts from YumYums on the way.

It should be noted that it's important to eat breakfast before an injectables treatment to avoid nausea. Caffeine can be tricky, increased blood flow can increase the chances of bruising, but not by enough for us to say 'NO COFFEE.'

At the visit Injector Dee consulted the notes previously recorded by Michelle. She noted where Michelle had injected in the past, and how many units per area. With a wax pencil she marked Frankie's forehead and Waited for Michelle's approval.

Not so shockingly, Dee was able to correctly mark the client, even though he was her first male patient, Dee remembered that marking a male patient requires extra units and higher markings to avoid a cave man heavy brow.

Dee also asked Frankie the ever important question - do you want to be 'frozen' or do you want movement. Frankie prefers moment because he's so expressive. His goal is to avoid hard etched lines, while also allowing him to raise his brows.

weeks after his botox appointment. As you can see Injector Dee totally nailed his request. He can still raise his brows enough to take a photo, but the lines aren't deep.

Those dynamic moving lines aren't strong enough to become static stuck lines that he'd need Microneedling to treat.

When asked if he's visit with an injector in Training again he said "You know, I was nervous, but I should have known anyone trained by Meesha was going to be a rock star, 10/10 would try again!"
